INCIDENT MANAGEMENT

The Challenge

Workplace misconduct can never be eliminated entirely, but when it's visible, it can be addressed. Providing a hotline or web intake site to your employees gives them a safe place to report their concerns, but studies show that over 80 percent of ethics and compliance incidents are reported directly to managers¹. While this speaks to a level of trust in leadership, these open-door reports create their own set of risks. They are typically handled at a specific location or, even worse, on an individual level. Without visibility into reported concerns across the whole of the organisation, the leadership's understanding of its risk is incomplete.

The Solution

EthicsPoint[®] is a centralised incident management database that can track all of your reports regardless of intake method. From hotline calls, mobile intake reports and web-based forms to report forms for capturing open-door conversations, you can have a more complete picture of the misconduct within your organisation. It also allows your organisation to build and utilise a more decisive and consistent investigative process for each report regardless of its origin. This empowers managers and organisations to build and maintain their open-door culture, gain a more holistic picture of their organisation's risks and make more informed decisions.

Process: Incident Management for the Whole Organisation

- 1 Collect all reports of misconduct, whether it's from a hotline, mobile intake, web intake site or an open-door report form.
- 2 Manage all incidents in a centralised database and investigating each report through standard operating processes.
- 3 Learn about risks and potential problem areas through robust analytics and ad hoc reports. Identify any problem areas to address before they grow or spread.
- 4 Act based on the information you gather from your incident management system: enhance your code of conduct, direct your training and refine your policies.
