

Employment Law Training: Knowing Your Rights & Responsibilities

Creating a workplace environment where all employees are protected from harassment and violence, are fairly compensated, feel valued and have equal opportunity for success should be a driving force for any ethics and compliance programme. Especially with the prominence of today's headlines on harassment, discrimination and diversity, organisations simply cannot afford the legal and reputational backlash that accompanies a misaligned and unethical workplace culture.

Building a culture of ethics and respect for all employees begins with an organisation-wide understanding of the laws and regulations that protect employees and employers throughout the duration of their relationship – from interview to departure. And a critical element in driving and aligning behaviour to ethics and compliance standards, laws and ideals is consistent, engaging and topical employee training.

NAVEX's Employment Law Training Category is a perfect place to start, build and reinforce key organisational culture objectives, legal alignment and behavioural standards. Addressing vital topics such as workplace harassment, discrimination, disability, diversity and wage and hour, you can be sure that you're driving behavioural changes or maintaining a culture that allows your employees and your organisation to thrive.

Our regularly updated online training delivers subject matter expertise, contextual relevance that helps employees understand and retain key learnings on their rights and their employers' responsibilities. Compelling storytelling built around recognisable and relatable situations captures employees' attention. Interactive quizzes and "what would you do?" engagements help employees internalise key lessons so they can recall and apply them in their daily roles.

Consistently Refreshed

For more than 15 years, NAVEX has rebuilt its workplace harassment training course every two years. This has allowed our clients to deliver timely training to their employees consistently on this important subject. Other courses are similarly updated on a regular cadence to allow for relevance and accuracy.
